The Marvel-themed season for Fortnite ended with a Galactus-sized bang. As has been teased since the debut season on August 4, the game's current season concluded with a live event that pitted Fortnite players against a planet-sized supervillain in a dramatic showdown – and it ended with the game going down, replaced by a timer to kick off season 5. For those who managed to get into the case things started quite tame. I spent about half an hour just hanging around for the Avengers helicarrier while empty-handed, unable to do anything like build or pick up a weapon. Epic even posted a message letting players know that they're really in the right place. When the event began properly, Galactic slowly made its way to the island before bellowing ominous words to beware. I'm hungry. Then he slapped the helicarrier from the sky, and the players were guided into the action of Iron Man himself. It was a strange event: to stop galactus from destroying the island, players had to pilot a version of an iconic battle bus armed with explosives to feed the supervillain. Things played like an over-the-top arcade shooter and eventually ended up with Galactus exploding, leaving the island seemingly intact. Image: Epic Was also tease joining events in Fortnite's own strange lesson: things ended with a shot of the main character Jonesy in a suit lying on the floor of a monomonic office. Currently the game is down, with the countdown ticking away hours until season 5 launches at 12pm ET tonight. Leading up to the event, Galactus's face could be seen looking in the background during the battle royale games, steadily growing in size with each day gone. It also seems that developer Epic expected a large crowd, warning players to arrive an hour before 4pm ET kickoff time (although it ended up starting a bit later than that). Of course, this is just the latest in a series of dramatic live events for Fortnite. So far, that has included a mech anti-seam battle, an explosion that flooded the island, and a Travis Scott concert series. Perhaps the most ambitious saw the entire island sucked into the black hole, shutting down the game for several days before launching Fortnite: Chapter 2. Please see for more information on Dec. 16, 2020 Version 9.10.1 Bug Fixes, Stability Fixes, and App Optimization One of the things I like about Twitch is the ability to clip moments from my favorite strips, being able to edit and trim clips was always fun to do and letting you see how the clip turned out to be during and at the end of the trimming process was always satisfactory. However, after I recently updated the app clips that I, well trimmed, were not displayed during the trimming process, making it difficult for me to know what unnecessary fluff I need to make. So I pretty much gotta leave the clip unchanged and hope I'll put it right, which is not fun for me if I don't know how it turns out after trimming it. I don't know if I'm the only one with this problem, but if I'm not and others have this problem and they can fix this issue, that'll be great and I might give it a 5 star because I really like the app. Update: A recent update fixed it, so now I'm happy and will give it 5 stars. The bug still exists, which is for a long time when in dark mode, some movements or actions can cause the app to switch to light mode, which takes a long time and 4 menu pages to flip through to turn it back, which is uncomfortable and a little annoying. Another issue exists is that when you're watching the stream in full-screen mode, and you double tap to open the chat, and you click on the chat word, the menu will pop up, allowing you to gift them a sub, or view their info etc. The problem is that when this menu pops up when full-screen mode (phone on the side), there is no way to close the menu; you can't click anywhere to get rid of the menu because it takes the entire screen, and the only way to close it is to flip the device and return to a screen that isn't full screen, tap anywhere outside the menu, and it'll close. Again, it is a question that is the solution, but takes a lot of time to undo, which can be annoying to users. A simple fix would be to add a close button to this menu, both full screen and without full screen. Just like a the last question when you tap emotes chat, the only way to close the menu is to click outside the menu, which can be difficult/uncomfortable. The same solution exists where all you need for this problem is to add menu output buttons. Although the app wasn't the best for mobile streaming, or watching older videos (there were many times when the video could be reset completely after watching the ad, or just accidentally blinking and then reset back to the beginning of the video), it worked well enough, although I still don't understand why the method of getting bits while watching ads was removed from the mobile, despite already just giving any bits compared to what you could get to watch the ad on your computer. Recent changes to adding the recommended channel to the home screen are buggy to me and don't actually load properly (are stuck with the original error message as well as the recommended channels), but the reloading page works as a solution now. I personally find most suggestions, despite their push to make me watch more content... distasteful because most of them are people I followed and didn't want to see again as the community was either exclusive or I didn't really connect with the strip. So honestly, it may not go to a website where I have my list of what I started watching and the stripS I want to watch and am following. If you're a Fortnite player – or if you live in a household with someone who is – you might be wondering what happened. Let's answer five quick questions about what we know about Device, the season finale of the live event for Fortnite Chapter 2, Season 2.LoadingThe Fortnite live event was a huge online event to celebrate the finale of Fortnite's current season – think the final, long-awaited episode of your favorite TV show. We explain the videogame everyone is talking about (and why you probably should be with your kids). Read moreYou've endured twists and turns for months and the season is going to end with a bang, and maybe some cliffhangers. Every 10 weeks, Fortnite undergoes an in-game season change marked by a live event. This live event will begin chapter 2, Season 3.While the basic concept Stays the Same - It's Battle royale style, last-player permanent survival survival - Seasonal leap includes content changes, from progression to narration, new challenges, costumes and maps. The live event itself contains a series of discoveries that are hinted at using in-game clues (as well as some leaks). This event was officially called Device, and a visit to the players joined during the game by fortnite developer Epic Games.When was the Fortnite live event? It was 2pm Eastern time in the US on June 15, which was 4pm AEST on 16.00.Loading... But despite Epic warning players to sign up for a nice and early take part, the company tweeted the event had reached capacity about half an hour before it started. LoadingTuesday live event was actually delayed twice by Epic - the first in April for an unknown reason, possibly due to a coronavirus outbreak. The live event was then scheduled for June 4, but developers chose to delay it for the second time amid the global Black Lives Matter protests. What is wrong? A lot of predictions were spot on. The agency, building a fortnite in the middle of the map, was blown up after mysterious orbs rose from it. Players were then treated to a strange outscene by one of Fortnite's default character models working in the office. When they loaded back into the game, the aerial view showed a big change to one of the game's most persistent elements - the storm. The storm, a series of increasingly offensive circles that force players into conflict until only one remains, has now become a huge wall of water. LoadingIt is under in-game posters before the event showing Fortnite characters interacting with water. Players can swim in the water, but it hurts them just like the storm was. Right now, an ominous wall of water is there. But players expect it to come crashing out in a few days, revealing more changes to the map to officially kick off Fortnite's Chapter 2, Season 3.So is it like when everything disappeared in that black hole? Pretty much, but not so radical. At the conclusion of the Chapter 1 game, Fortnite's entire map hit the rocket, got sucked into the black hole, and was unplayable for 36 hours. But shortly after Tuesday's event, players were able to jump back to the normal game right away. This event marked a shift between seasons rather than divisions – so it's a little more low-key than a massive change back in 2019. What else has been going on at Fortnite recently? Loading... Battle royale video games existed before Fortnite, but its game developers have been expanding the Fortnite universe since its inception. In April Travis Scott performed live and even released a new single within the Fortnite world, with players able to dance and mosh as the projection rapper appeared on stage in front of them. First look at the new Christopher Nolan Tenet was also discovered through the game, with the trailer released digitally only after it was broadcast during the game.
